Howard University News Service is a free wire service that delivers stories weekly to NNPA member newspapers on issues pertaining to minority communities. Video and print stories are produced by senior-level journalism students in the Howard University School of Communication's Department of Media, Journalism and Film, and are edited by professional journalists/professors in the department. The news service covers national and local events in and around the Washington area, including Congress and the White House.

*Member newspapers can also visit the news service website, hunewsservice.com, where they are able to use any stories or video that the news service has produced with the proper credit line, Reporter/Photographer's name, Howard University News Service.

For more information regarding the news service or a particular story, please contact managing editor Ron Harris at 202.316.6567 or rjharris@howard.edu.
